Doylestown, PA - Williams Family Law partners Susan J. Smith and Robert J. Salzer served as faculty members at the 2018 Family Law Institute, hosted by the Pennsylvania Bar Institute, the educational division of the Pennsylvania Bar Association. The program was presented live on April 17 and 18 at the CLE Conference Center in the Wanamaker Building in Philadelphia and simulcast live to 18 locations throughout Pennsylvania.

The duo, along with two members of the judiciary, participated in a panel discussion entitled “Things We Do Wrong in Custody Litigation - 6 Keys to Trying Custody Cases.” The discussion both recaps and builds on a previous seminar the group presented earlier this year at the Pennsylvania Bar Association Family Law Section 2018 Winter Meeting in New Orleans.

Susan Smith is widely considered one of the top divorce and child custody attorneys in Southeastern Pennsylvania. Recognized by ALM publications as a “Woman Leader in the Law,” she concentrates her practice on divorce, child custody, alimony and support, equitable distribution, and complex business valuation and asset investigation issues impacting high net worth clients.

Salzer, who holds an LL.M in Taxation, focuses his practice on financially complex, high net worth family law matters, including divorce, alimony and spousal support, equitable distribution, child support, child custody, and marital agreements. In 2017, Salzer published “Stress-Free Divorce,” one in a series of books on divorce and related issues.
