Why Enroll Your Trademark in the Amazon Brand Registry?

Selling on Amazon is nearly ubiquitous, so it's imperative to protect your brand – your trademark – across the platform. Amazon has made it easier to do so by overhauling its Brand Registry last year and creating, in their own words, “an accurate and trusted experience for customers.” As a brand owner, you must have a dual focus on strengthening and protecting your brand while also engaging and serving your customers. The Amazon Brand Registry supports this dual focus. Read more

Here Comes the Rush to Trademark 'Philly Special'

One of the Philadelphia Eagles Super Bowl victory's most memorable moments witnessed was a gutsy play that the team called the "Philly Special." It was one of the boldest calls in Super Bowl history, and it has inspired some bold moves at the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office ("USPTO"), as well. As the term "Philly Special" has spread like wildfire through Eagles' fandom, quick-thinking entrepreneurs have raced to capitalize on it, filing trademark applications to secure the rights to those golden words. SCOTUS Rules Trademark Disparagement Clause Unconstitutional

The U.S. Supreme Court recently ruled that the U.S. Trademark Office's refusal to register "The Slants" as a trademark for an Oregon-based rock band was unconstitutional. This is a case the trademark attorneys at Panitch Schwarze have been watching closely, as this landmark decision could reshape U.S. trademark law significantly. Read more

Protecting Your Intellectual Property on the Web

Senator Ted Cruz of Texas made headlines earlier this year for a reason completely unrelated to his politics. Shortly after Cruz announced his candidacy for the next presidential election, the news media discovered that the presumptive Internet address for the new candidate's campaign had been "hijacked" and now displayed a message that was contrary to Cruz's own political stances.
