PHILADELPHIA (October 2018) - Intellectual property attorney Bridget H. Labutta recently participated in a professional development roundtable at Villanova University's Charles Widger School of Law. Labutta discussed her career path and provided insight into the qualities that make a successful intellectual property attorney.

The roundtable is designed to introduce first year law students to the legal profession and to give them more insight into the practice of intellectual property law. The discussion is part of the law students' Professional Development course and is intended to help students understand the strengths and skills that best lend themselves to particular areas of law.

Labutta focuses her practice in the area of intellectual property, including counseling emerging and established companies regarding trademark, copyright and domain name matters, negotiating and drafting licenses, and representing clients in federal court litigation and administrative proceedings.

She earned a bachelor's degree from Saint Mary's College and a law degree from the University of New Hampshire School of Law.
